Selecting a New File Type You can use the Image/Mode/Save For Web And Print options to create a new file type for your document. Select File/Save For Web and Print from the menu and, from the same dialog box, follow these steps: Figure 2-2 shows the Save For Web & Print dialog box that appears. Figure 2-2: You can choose whether to save for Web, use the middle format (PSD) for print, or save for both. 1. Under Save For Web, choose Web Formats from the File Type menu. You can also choose from High Quality (JPEG 2000), High Quality (JPEG), and Standard Quality (JPEG). You can save in separate layers for web and print, or keep the layers together (default in this dialog box). 2. Under Print, choose Standard from the File Type menu. For print, choose the middle format (PSD) option, where you're creating a single layer (bitmap) that's suitable for print without color management. Choosing this option takes you to the same dialog box in Figure 2-2. 3. To save a

Jan. 25 (Bloomberg) -- Top hedge funds and private equity firms managed $650 billion, or 28 percent, of global assets as of Dec. 31, 2010, according to preliminary data from Hedge Fund Research Inc. Read more on Hedge Funds » Jan. 25 (Bloomberg) -- A third of private equity-backed banks are run by women, even as the percentage of women in the top ranks of the industry continues to stall. Women senior management in private equity-backed banks has risen from an average of 7.7 percent of the roster in the mid-1990s to an average of 22.1 percent of the roster at listed private equity-backed banks in 2005, according to an analysis of the female executives' chief roles at U.S. banks. A team of three researchers, including John Naisbitt Jr., obtained new figures on the size of market moves from the American Stock Exchange beginning in 1929. Read more on Bull Market » Jan. 3 (Bloomberg) -- While low interest rates raise mortgage rates and make lending more expensive, they've also helped home builders spend more money on construction and materials. In 2010, sales of homes, single-family units, and apartment buildings reached a record $1.4 trillion. The U.S. Read more on Housing » Jan. 2 (Bloomberg) -- Bernanke and Paulson are back. The early success of the $700 billion Troubled Asset Relief Program is not about to be forgotten. The surge of money flowing into the global financial system has clearly helped stabilize the markets. But a look through the other end of the telescope reveals many reasons for trepidation. The U.S. financial system is still very fragile. The recession could linger. There are no government tools that can be used to stabilize the housing market, at least for the near future. And the drip-drip-drip of bad mortgages is still a chronic problem for the U.S. economy. What's New In Photoshop CC 2018?

Daniel Hannan on politics, philosophy, religion, and the human condition. The blog is The Porcupine's Quill, and it is written by a resident of the Kingdom of the Netherlands. Tuesday, February 22, 2009 The New Turn in the Battle of Ideas I've been looking at some data recently on blogger metrics. One of the things it tells us is that certain words are more popular in some blogs than in others. I'd like to explore this a little, since it seems like a good test case. There's a tendency, especially on the Left, to treat political topics as something like a game show, where the question is "Who can argue against me most effectively?" The depressing fact is that there's seldom a strategy that works. Even when one is open to reasonable approaches, the response tends to be "Well, just address the arguments, you know." But some people's minds are not conditioned to this way of thinking. The catechism of a Leftist starts, invariably, with an assertion like this: I'm not an evil person. Now that's perhaps obvious, but what strikes me is that the overwhelming majority of Leftists place such trust in their innate goodness. And most of them are so incapable of defending their claims that they routinely descend into the depths of pre-20th-century religious notions like original sin, or of the conspiratorial mindset. Now of course leftists are far from alone in this respect. Most people trust, if they trust anything, that they are good. But there's a difference, as I see it, between the ordinary credulity of most people and the extreme credulity of the Left. Most people have no difficulty accepting, say, that the Sun goes around the Earth, or that the Earth goes around the Sun. Most people find it hard to accept the Moon moving; or that the Earth is not flat; or that the world is round and that men live on it. But these are matters of science. But to even consider people to be evil in any way is a different matter altogether. That is profoundly unscientific. And the evidence of our minds shows that most people are very resistant to such conclusions. The Left seeks a more exact science in an epistemology that is always facing off against the other epistemology. And you can't really win a mental war of the mind: the minds of the two sides are so, well, different. (
