I'm using quartz.arcore.io to create a "local" workspace on an Apple Pencil. Basically, I want to draw a 2x2px image on a workspace. When I choose Rectangle tool, it asks me for the coordinate of the left and right sides of the rectangle, but it also asks for two more coordinates (top and bottom) that I don't understand. In other words, it asks me to draw a rectangle of a defined width and height. Is there a way to draw a rectangle with only the four points asked by the Rectangle tool? A: These options are because the standard rectangle object in Quartz doesn't match the custom rectangles that you get from creating a new image. If you get a new object from the rectangles tool (as you normally would to draw a rectangle) it will still only have two corner points but you can set the size of the object. If you want the same functionality then you'll need to build your own rectangle class.

const { workspace, progress, path } = document.getElementById("workspace");
const canvas = document.getElementById("canvas");
const ctx = canvas.getContext("2d");
const workspace = workspace.create(0, 0, 5, 5);
const progress = progress.create();
// build a custom rectangle class class Rectangle {
  constructor(x, y, width, height) {
```
