I'm trying to create a data frame from a csv file which has a header row containing the column names and one row for each row in the data. In the header row there are two columns which I want to use as indices to the data and append to a new column. I have included a snippet of my code below `import pandas as pd import numpy as np import matplotlib.pyplot as plt dataset = pd.read_csv("E:/hope5`

I'm not sure how much you need to get into the details of how npm works, but the short answer is: npm requires a package.json file npm uses the package.json file to get some info about your project. npm then makes the very simple decision of which module to require, based on the name you've given it. For example, if you say: `npm install express --save` npm will download a npm module from the net, extract the contents (including node_modules, or any other required files) and add that to your project. It will then do `b7e8fdf5c8`
